PUTTING THE MORA LIGTS.

Mr. Nye Again.

It is a very common device of the Democracy and its allies, in the absence of gold and true reasons against the Republican party, to make charges of bribery or other improper influences. Of course it is impossible to meet such loose and general accusations and as a rule they come from persons and journals whose standing is such as to render answer or denial unnecessary.

Encouraged by this contemptuous silence of the Republicans in such cases, Mr. John Nye, by grace of himself and three others, Enforced Prohibition candidate for Governor of Maine, has tried his hand at this sort of performance and has gone so far as to say that some prominent Republican tried to induce him by promise of office to withdraw from the campaign. He even gave a detailed statement of the process, in which a sudden change of heart was effected by the promise of a close carriage, low whispering and other dramatic accessories figured in a blood curdling fashion. He carefully omitted, however, to give the name of his fiendish tempter, but darkly insinuated that he would do so, if the fact were denied.

A report of this awful business appeared in the Argus of Friday last. On Saturday the Press dealt Mr. Nye's moving tale in toto and challenged him to name the man. He wrote a letter in reply which was printed in the Press yesterday in which he hedged the question and evaded a direct answer. But we cannot let Mr. Nye off so easily. He is going about the State telling his cock and bull stories and illustrating them by his own personal experience. He promises to show that his gang of rascals, through his work and that then, this object being accomplished, they can go under the waves of oblivion unnoticed amid the excitement of election day and the subsequent interest in the returns.

Mr. Nye is, perhaps one should say, was a man of standing and position in the State. It is not often that we can catch a man of this kind in a lying story. He is a man of a certain reputation and he is a man of a certain reputation and he is a man of a certain reputation.

The Vermont Election.

The first of the September elections in the Northern States comes today in Vermont. Of course there is no doubt as to the general result of the contest. The Republican candidate for Governor, Lieutenant Governor and State Senators, has already secured a majority and the Legislature will be overwhelmingly Republican.
